About Comptoir Français du Thé

“The craftmaker committed to the delight of the French Tasse”

For over 40 years, it's in Alsace that we design and produce high-quality organic or conventional recipes.

Committed, naturally inventive, and made in France, our tasse brings pleasure to the drinker.

Our production site is certified IFS Higher Level. We support retailers (Tea specialists, roasters, grocers, wine merchants, restaurateurs, etc.) in implementing solutions tailored to their projects.

This support is based, in part, on Comptoir Français du Thé's firm commitment not to open our own physical stores. Instead, we prefer to allocate our resources to the development of our retail partners' activities.

 Teas and infusions made in Strasbourg.

For a committed tasse,
for an inventive tasse,
for a tasse of pleasure.

NINA MÉTAYER
PÂTISSERIE PARIS

Invent the french

tea time with Nina Métayer

Comptoir Français du Thé collaborates with the renowned Chef Nina MÉTAYER to offer original tea and infusion recipes. Becoming a double Best Pastry Chef in France before the age of 30 and internationally recognized, she brings her talent, delicacy, and creativity to co-sign with us creations of excellence.

From this beautiful collaboration, four recipes will emerge. Named “Délicatesse”, these four creations are designed to offer a unique tasting experience:

• Délicatesse Provençale, the delightful iced green tea with apricot and IGP thyme from Provence, will be available from April.

• Délicatesse de Syracuse, a splendid black and green tea with essential lemon oil from Syracuse, will be available from the summer.

• Délicatesse de Rooibos et café, an incredible gourmet Rooibos based on Ethiopian Yirgacheffe coffee, will also be available from the summer.

• Délicatesse étoilée, a true light preparation made from buckwheat and teas with woody notes.

Oolong Blends

Wu Long means "black dragon". The legend of its creation recounts that, around 300 years ago, a tea planter from the region of Fujian was walking through the tea plants, wondering how to create new varieties and "obtain" new tastes.

Suddenly a dragon, an emblematic animal in China, came out of one of the trees. The tea planter interpreted this as a good omen, picked a few leaves, left them to ferment for a shorter time than usual and discovered original new flavor notes. Oolong tea was born.

It is partially fermented, with fermentation having been deliberately halted before the transformation into black tea has been completed.

Its very subtle, delicate flavor varies depending on its fermentation rate. It may have white floral notes, or chestnut, honey or hazelnut flavor.

Flavored White Teas

A 19th century traveler had observed that to make these teas, the Chinese left freshly picked leaves and buds in the sun, then in the shade.

These slightly silvery leaves, covered by a fine white down, are broad and unrolled.

Their liquor is relatively surprising, since it is non-tannic, very clear and light, with a very delicate apricot flavour. These teas have fresh, floral notes. White teas are often drunk in the summertime in Asia, as cooling refreshment.

Teas

Black tea from Ceylon

In 1972, the island of Ceylon was re-named Sri Lanka, but its old name, dating from the British Empire, has continued to be used in the world of tea, and a tea from this country is frequently referred to as a Ceylon tea.

The world's third biggest producer, Sri Lanka, nicknamed the island of tea, supplies over half of the black tea consumed in France.

The name Ceylon tea actually covers four major tea-growing areas and numerous tea estates. They each have their own character and their own specific flavour.

The tea leaves are harvested all year round, at around fortnightly intervals.

These regions develop flush periods, during which the tea presents specific aromatic notes.

Depending on the combination of winds, rains and the season, the nuances and character of the teas vary greatly and, beyond a specific period, they are no longer found for the rest of the year. This is "the Season" (a little like the seasonality of some fruit and vegetables here, very good when they are in-season and mediocre the rest of the time).

Black tea from India

India is the world's biggest tea-growing country, accounting for almost a third of total global tea production.

Indian teas are extremely varied. Firstly, because the climate conditions and relief vary hugely from one region to another: mountainous areas, plateau or plains; and secondly, because the plantations do not all have the same varieties of tea plants.

TEAS

Green tea from Japan

Unlike all the other green teas produced around the world, Japanese green teas are not prepared using the traditional Chinese process but, instead, undergo a very specific roasting process, using steam, giving them an immediately recognisable glossy appearance and slightly salty flavour.

The most common tea grades are Bancha, Sencha and Gyokuro. Top-of-the-range Gyokuro and Sencha grade teas can be very expensive. Matcha – powdered green tea – is mainly used during the Tea Ceremony.

Green tea from China

It is very difficult to propose a grading system due to a lack of rigour and precise standards, particularly since certain teas can correspond to several different criteria.

Grading may be carried out on the basis of the tea shape, or the name of the region, or the production method.

For example: Teas with leaves rolled into balls, such as Gunpowder or Chun Mee, in which the "balls" will be larger since they are rolled lengthways.

Flavored Rooibos

Rooibos is a plant that grows in the South African bush, which has the Latin name of Aspalathus. This spiny shrub with fine, needle-like leaves grows wild in the region of Cederberg in Africa, north-west of Cape Town.

Once they have been cut, the stems are collected and placed under the sun. Fermentation occurs, oxidising the initially green leaf to turn it red.

Obviously, since it is caffeine (thein) and tannin-free, it is mellow and easy to drink at any time of the day.

GREEN TEAS RANKING

Names of different shapes of green tea depend on their origin, local / regional naming or production methods.

The reason comes from the green tea producers have never been subject to the British influence, so they don't follow the ranking used by other countries.

How to prepare tea

DOSING THE TEA

It's difficult to answer a question which looks simple, because tea kettles and cups change a lot. In average, we recommend a full teaspoon (2g) for a 10cl cup and a 5 minutes infused time. We also recommend not adding the extra teaspoon for the kettle. First of all, it's all about pleasure around a good cup of tea.

TEMPERATURE & INFUSED TIME

Our teas and herbal tea require a great quality of water. A perfect water would be a filtered or a spring water.
