About Comptoir Français du Thé

“The craftmaker committed to the delight of the French Tasse”

For over 40 years, it's in Alsace that we design and produce high-quality organic or conventional recipes.

Committed, naturally inventive, and made in France, our tasse brings pleasure to the drinker.

Our production site is certified IFS Higher Level. We support retailers (Tea specialists, roasters, grocers, wine merchants, restaurateurs, etc.) in implementing solutions tailored to their projects.

This support is based, in part, on Comptoir Français du Thé's firm commitment not to open our own physical stores. Instead, we prefer to allocate our resources to the development of our retail partners' activities.

Teas and infusions made in Strasbourg.

For a committed tasse, for an inventive tasse, for a cup of pleasure.

Tea and infusion recipes created with Chef Nina Métayer, World Pastry Chef of the Years 2023 & 2024

Comptoir Français du Thé has teamed up with the renowned pastry cook Nina MÉTAYER in order to offer original tea and infusion recipes. Twice named best pastry cook in France before the age of 30 and internationally renowned, she brings her talent, delicacy and inventiveness to co-design with us creations of excellence. Since October 2023, Nina MÉTAYER has been awarded the prestigious title of World Pastry Cook of the Year.

Because the French cup of tea is also imagined and produced in France, these elegant creations are made in our Strasbourg workshop.

It's from this beautiful collaboration that 4 recipes were born. Named «Délicatesse» or «Delicacy» in english, these 4 creations are designed to offer a unique tasting experience.

- 1 Délicatesse Provençale, the very pleasant green tea iced with labricot and thyme IGP de Provence.
- 2 Délicatesse de Syracuse, a splendid black and green tea with Syracuse lemon essential oil.
- 3 Délicatesse de Rooibos et Café, made with Yirgacheffe d'Éthiopie mocha.
- 4 Finally, Délicatesse Étoilée, an exceptional recipe based on roasted buckwheat and chestnuts from Ardèche in France.

Oolong Blends

Wu Long means “black dragon”. The legend of its creation recounts that, around 300 years ago, a tea planter from the region of Fujian was walking through the tea plants, wondering how to create new varieties and “obtain” new tastes.

Suddenly a dragon, an emblematic animal in China, came out of one of the trees. The tea planter interpreted this as a good omen, picked a few leaves, left them to ferment for a shorter time than usual and discovered original new flavor notes. Oolong tea was born.

It is partially fermented, with fermentation having been deliberately halted before the transformation into black tea has been completed.

Its very subtle, delicate flavor varies depending on its fermentation rate. It may have white floral notes, or chestnut, honey or hazelnut flavor.

Flavored White Teas

A 19th century traveler had observed that to make these teas, the Chinese left freshly picked leaves and buds in the sun, then in the shade.

These slightly silvery leaves, covered by a fine white down, are broad and unrolled.

Their liquor is relatively surprising, since it is non-tannic, very clear and light, with a very delicate apricot flavour. These teas have fresh, floral notes. White teas are often drunk in the summertime in Asia, as cooling refreshment.

Teas

Black tea from Ceylon

In 1972, the island of Ceylon was re-named Sri Lanka, but its old name, dating from the British Empire, has continued to be used in the world of tea, and a tea from this country is frequently referred to as a Ceylon tea.

The world's third biggest producer, Sri Lanka, nicknamed the island of tea, supplies over half of the black tea consumed in France.

The name Ceylon tea actually covers four major tea-growing areas and numerous tea estates. They each have their own character and their own specific flavour.

The tea leaves are harvested all year round, at around fortnightly intervals.

These regions develop flush periods, during which the tea presents specific aromatic notes.

Depending on the combination of winds, rains and the season, the nuances and character of the teas vary greatly and, beyond a specific period, they are no longer found for the rest of the year. This is "the Season" (a little like the seasonality of some fruit and vegetables here, very good when they are in-season and mediocre the rest of the time).

The birthplace of tea and the world's biggest producer until the 19th century, China is in second place today, behind India.

There are more tea gardens in China than there are wines in France: an infinite number of tea categories, be they white, yellow, green, Oolong or black teas. Historically, China is the oldest tea-producing country and used to be the only tea exporter in the world.

Black tea from India

India is the world's biggest tea-growing country, accounting for almost a third of total global tea production.

Indian teas are extremely varied. Firstly, because the climate conditions and relief vary hugely from one region to another: mountainous areas, plateau or plains; and secondly, because the plantations do not all have the same varieties of tea plants.

Teas produced during the second harvest have strong sweet and fruity flavors. This is famous Muscat grapes flavor which is looked for and delivered in these warming teas, without astringency.

Green tea from Japan

Unlike all the other green teas produced around the world, Japanese green teas are not prepared using the traditional Chinese process but, instead, undergo a very specific roasting process, using steam, giving them an immediately recognisable glossy appearance and slightly salty flavour.

The most common tea grades are Bancha, Sencha and Gyokuro. Top-of-the-range Gyokuro and Sencha grade teas can be very expensive. Matcha – powdered green tea – is mainly used during the Tea Ceremony.

Green tea from China

It is very difficult to propose a grading system due to a lack of rigour and precise standards, particularly since certain teas can correspond to several different criteria.

Grading may be carried out on the basis of the tea shape, or the name of the region, or the production method.

For example: Teas with leaves rolled into balls, such as Gunpowder or Chun Mee, in which the "balls" will be larger since they are rolled lengthways.

Flavored Rooibos

Rooibos is a plant that grows in the South African bush, which has the Latin name of Aspalathus. This spiny shrub with fine, needle-like leaves grows wild in the region of Cederberg in Africa, north-west of Cape Town.

Once they have been cut, the stems are collected and placed under the sun. Fermentation occurs, oxidising the initially green leaf to turn it red.

Obviously, since it is caffeine (thein) and tannin-free, it is mellow and easy to drink at any time of the day.

Names of different shapes of green tea depend on their origin, local / regional naming or production methods.

The reason comes from the green tea producers have never been subject to the British influence, so they don't follow the ranking used by other countries.

How to prepare tea

DOSING THE TEA

It's difficult to answer a question which looks simple, because tea kettles and cups change a lot. In average, we recommend a full teaspoon (2g) for a 10cl cup and a 5 minutes infused time. We also recommend not adding the extra teaspoon for the kettle. First of all, it's all about pleasure around a good cup of tea.

TEMPERATURE & INFUSED TIME

Our teas and herbal tea require a great quality of water. A perfect water would be a filtered or a spring water.
